

Wisconsin Skiing

Wisconsin Skiing is the best skiing. Never thought about skiing in Wisconsin before? You're missing out! Wisconsin is ranked third in the country for downhill skiing and snowboarding. Whether you're a downhill skier, hardcore snowboarder, or cross-country enthusiast, you might be surprised to find that you don't have to look any further than Wisconsin for all the best slopes, terrains and trails.

Wisconsin downhill skiing is in a class by itself, and here are just a few reasons why:

- The scenery is incredible: 46% of the state is entirely forest, and the geography includes valleys, rivers, bluffs and elevations to over 1,950 feet, making this state a nature-lover's paradise.
- Wisconsin offers 30 different ski destinations.
- Many of Wisconsin's best ski resorts are just a short distance from Chicago, and offer features that compete with top-rated hotels in other popular skiing destinations.
- Wisconsin's season starts as early as mid-November and usually runs through March, weather permitting.
- No matter how much natural snowfall the state gets (usually an average of 40 inches) the snowmakers will crank on once the temp dips below freezing, and keep the slopes skiable all season. Wisconsin also appeals to cross country skiers, with more than 250 trails across the state, making Wisconsin a coveted destination for the sport. From backwoods trailblazing in solitude to state and national park-sponsored popular events, like candlelit skiing and ski races, Wisconsin offers something for every cross-country adventurer. With its wild and rugged landscape, terrain parks for snowboarders are also becoming more and more popular. Half-pipes, huge vertical drops... and for those snowboarders who want to ski at the only super pipe in the Midwest? Come to Wisconsin to find it. Wisconsin is famous for a lot more than just cheese, beer and record-breaking quarterbacks. Travelers who have searched out the best the country has to offer in skiing and snowboarding know that Wisconsin also offers some of the ultimate skiing destinations.
